EDITORYAL: 'Complete failure'

IF MALACANANG has described Vice President Sara Duterte's tenure as chief of the Department of Education (DepEd) from June 22 to June 2024 as "a complete failure." is it a reasonable conclusion based on facts?

For context, the Palace reaction came after the Vice President said during a program in Kuwait that while other countries have modernized their education systems, the Philippines has remained stuck in a paper-and-pencil stage.

She added that students abroad are already engaged in robotics and coding, while the Philippines continues to struggle to catch up.

But the Palace countered that VP Duterte had the opportunity to lead DepEd for two years and : implement the very reforms she is now urging, and that whatever she is complaining about should have been accomplished during her time.

Duterte served as education secretary from June 2022 to June 2024. She claimed she resigned "out of genuine concern for our teachers and the Filipino youth," without clarifying her statement.

If Philippine education is in such a sorry state at present, it is partly because of Duterte's mismanagement of the vital government agency during her term.

In 2023, DepEd with Duterte at the helm completed only 192 out of 6,379 targeted new classrooms, or just few percent of the goal. Classroom rehabilitation also lagged, with only 208 of 7,550 projects completed. Thousands more did not even enter the procurement phase.

The DepEd Computerization Program recorded "zero percent" accomplishment in delivering thousands of laptops and e-learning tools in 2023. This included over 12,000 laptops for teachers and thousands of smart TVs and e-learning carts that were never distributed.

A congressional report revealed that: DepEd's disbursement rate for its textbook program: was just 17 percent in 2024, and only 11 percent the year before.

Sara Duterte also prioritized spending millions in confidential funds for projects that had little to do with fulfilling basic educational needs like textbooks and feeding programs.

The teacher's party-list group in Congress even labeled Duterte "the worst DepEd secretary ever," citing her failure to deliver on basic educational services.

While Duterte did make efforts to engage with educators and students, conducted school visits and listened to teachers' concerns firsthand. she acknowledged that many DepEd initiatives remained incomplete and urged her successor to prioritize curriculum reform.

Sara Duterte's time as DepEd Secretary was marked by ambitious rhetoric but limited execution.

While she raised valid concerns about the state of Philippine education, her administration struggled to deliver tangible improvements in infrastructure, technology, and basic learning resources.

The wasted opportunities to reform the basic education system in the country during Duterte's stewardship of DepEd for two years now compel her successor, Education Secretary Sonny Angara, to work double time and to turn failure into better educational opportunities for our youth.

If they say, they wil go in this place, with these people and be back at this time, hear them out and let PLINE, in Proverbs 22:6 them feel you are trusting them. Avoid to set them in the pit of doubts. let them feel they are valued and trusted. Another important thing about trust is that, we trust the Lord fully as we raise our children. May we keep on asking Him to give us wisdom how we will be a guide to them by living in patience, discipline, love and trust

Gatchalian wants firms previously owned by politicians banned from government projects

Ni Nelson Dimapilis

Senator Win Gatchalian is set to file a bold legislative measure that would ban companies previously owned by politicians from undertaking government infrastructure initiatives, including flood control

If enacted into law, the measure would lead to sweeping reforms in the implementation of government projects and is expected to effectively curb corruption, the senator said.

"A contractor or company previously owned by politicians will be barred from joining government contracts," Gatchalian said, pointing out that divestment has long been a convenient excuse for politicians to continue participating in government projects.

Reports have surfaced that some politicians act as contractors for their own government-funded infrastructure projects, raising renewed concerns about persistent conflicts of interest and corruption in the national budget process.

"May mga ulat na ilang politiko ay sangkot o nasa likod ng mga ghost projects o ang tinatawag kong 'ampaw' projects. We must examine what their connection is to these anomalous undertakings," Gatchalian said.

The Senate Finance Committee Chair acknowledged the scale of the challenge: "We're talking about 9,000 projects and these are just flood-control projects. We're not even counting roads, highways, and other infrastructure works," he added.

Voices into Action: Raising the Bar for the Youth talk about youth, people often think of mere "youngsters." Those beyond their thirties are simply called adults. But in the Philippines, the law is clear. Republic Act 8044 which established the National Youth Commission and the National Comprehensive and Coordinated Program on the Philippines, defines youth as those between 15 to 30 years old. The Philippine Statistics Authority even breaks this down: child youth (15-: 17), core youth (18-24), and adult youth (25-30).
